Battery Court Historic District (127-5897)
Richmond, VA

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The Battery Court Historic District, a turn of the twentieth century streetcar suburb in North Richmond, Virginia, is defined by its park-like ambiance. The neighborhood is almost exclusively residential, with two churches and several North Avenue commercial buildings on its easternmost edge. An irregular ravine runs diagonally between the southeast and northwest corners of the historic district, disrupting the gridded streets and alleys with an organic layout that heightens the neighborhood's picturesque qualities. Within the ravine is a well-tended city park. At the north end of the historic district a grassy median in the 2900 block of Hawthorne Avenue links Battery Park to Pollard Park. The arborescent streets are lined with bungalows and Colonial Revival houses. Tudor Revival and Spanish Mission style houses add variety to a streetscape where solid American Foursquare houses are the norm.

The northernmost edge of the Battery Court Historic District is Brookland Park Boulevard. On the east and south, the boundary is shared with the Barton Heights and Brookland Park Historic Districts. These boundaries were established by the neighborhood's original owner-developers. There are 769 contributing buildings (549 main buildings and 220 outbuildings), one contributing site (Battery Park), and 170 noncontributing resources in the historic district.

ARCHITECTURAL ANALYSIS

The Battery Court Historic District is a verdant neighborhood whose primary axis is the city's Battery Park. Though the park lies in a linear ravine with only a single crossing at Overbrook Road, it unifies the neighborhood rather than dividing it. The parkland was acquired by the city from the neighborhood's developers in 1922. The city graded and improved this 11.8-acre property, adding ramps, walkways, and playgrounds in the 1920s and '30s. From the late 1930s through the early 1940s new facilities were constructed, including a quaint, one-story, octagonal structure surfaced with cobblestones. As with other city parks, the Works Progress Administration helped to fund Battery Park's improvements.

The historic district is filled with single-family homes, consistent in scale and character. Most are two stories tall enclosing between 2,000 and 4,000 square feet of living space. The houses in the Battery Court Historic District are slightly larger than those in the adjacent Brookland Park Historic District, in part because of the larger lot sizes.¹ Furthermore, Battery Court includes more brick buildings than either Barton Heights or Brookland Park. Consistent with other early Northside Richmond suburbs, most Battery Court houses feature a single-story porch spanning the facade, and most reflect the American Colonial Revival or Bungalow styles. The district's only commercial buildings are small one- and two-story storefronts clustered on the west side of North Avenue at the district's edge. The district's two churches are the Classical Revival Overbrook Presbyterian Church (now All Souls Presbyterian) and Battery Park Christian Church (now Mount Hermon Baptist); a frame building which closely resembles the surrounding single-family homes.

In the northern portion of the historic district, most houses front on streets oriented north and south, such as Noble, Moss Side, Montrose, Edgewood, and Griffin Avenues. In the southern portion the streets, including Edgehill, Norwood, Lancaster, and Graham Roads, run east-west. The diagonal ravine created by Griffin's Branch and Battery Park disrupts the grid. The north-south orientation of Fendall Street, Montrose Avenue, and Hawthorne Avenue (an extension of the North Richmond Road) is deformed to accommodate the Battery Park ravine. Short streets like The Terrace and Dupont Circle are curved in response to the topography and tend to hold some of the district's more distinctive homes. Overbrook, a tree-lined avenue, is the only east-west street which spans the whole district. It is lined with single- and multi-family dwellings.

The American Foursquare is the predominant house type in the Battery Court Historic District, though there tends to be greater variety in the houses lining Battery Park. Along the park's edge examples of Tudor Revival (2800 Dupont Circle), Italian Renaissance/ Spanish Mission (2604 Hawthorne Avenue), and Prairie Style (2814 Dupont Circle) relieve the persistence of the Foursquare prototype. Overbrook Presbyterian (now All Souls Presbyterian) is the sole example of the Classical Revival style in the historic district.

Queen Anne (1910s)

Because of the later development of the Battery Court Historic District there are few examples of the Queen Anne style. In contrast there are many Queen Anne dwellings in the neighboring Barton Heights and Brookland Park Historic Districts. 301 Lancaster Road, a late example of the Queen Anne style, is a one-and-a-half-story frame cottage built in the 1910s. This small-scale dwelling exhibits the exuberance of the style with a complex cross-gabled standing-seam metal roof and a pyramidal-roofed entry tower. The asymmetrical mass sheathed in weatherboard, displays projecting bays, tripartite window openings and a lunette window in the gable end.

Colonial Revival (1910s-1949)

The Colonial Revival style is characterized by simple massing, box cornices, molded casings, symmetrical window openings, and generic details recalling American Colonial architecture. With the Bungalow style, the Colonial Revival dominates the residential architecture of Battery Court. Largely based on the American Foursquare prototype, these houses, duplexes, and small apartment buildings are clad in weatherboard, rendered in stucco, or surfaced with gunnite. Most of the roofs are hipped with cross gables (or center dormers), and are less complex than the Queen Anne style houses. The more high-style Colonial Revival examples have pedimented doors or entryways, dentils or modillions, and patterned upper window sashes.

In the transition from the Queen Anne style to the Colonial Revival, the asymmetries of the former style remained popular. 102 W. Graham Road is a two-story frame house with a hipped roof, cross gables, and two cast block chimneys. Square, fluted, Ionic columns support the roof of the asymmetrical, one-story, front porch. A pediment at the porch roof announces the entry. 11 W. Norwood Avenue shares many of the same features and characteristics.

The inherent solidity and balance of the colonial Georgian is more typical of the neighborhood. 2810 Dupont Circle (Barney Briel² House) is a symmetrical, two-story house surfaced with gunnite. A one-story porch spans the facade of the house with an elaborate central entry sequence, expressed by brick pylons that rise to create a second-floor balcony. Tuscan columns and a turned balustrade define the porch, which is built on brick piers. On both floors, doorways incorporate sidelights and transoms, with a single leaf door at the first floor and two-leafed French door at the second.

Contractor Meverell B. Van Doren's substantial brick house at 2911 Hawthorne Avenue (c. 1910) is two stories with a hipped roof. Van Doren's appreciation for the Georgian style is expressed by stone jack arches and the pediment at the porch's central entry. Its patterned fan light and sidelights distinguish the front door.

One of the neighborhood's most highly crafted houses is 2809 Montrose, the house of stone setter T. J. Cromar.³ The house is clad in a smooth-faced, random-ashlar stone. Molded cartouches accentuate the gable end centered over the fanlit entry.

A number of apartments and multi-family dwellings were built in the Battery Court District, and most represent the Colonial Revival style. 2801 Montrose Avenue is a symmetrical, two-story, brick apartment house. Two-story porches centered on projecting bays flank the center entry. The pedimented porches feature molded cornices and dentil moldings. A stepped parapet hides the shed roof. At the entry facade the parapet terminates in consoles at the corners of the projecting bays. The brick is laid in six-course American bond.

Other multi-family dwellings are found on North Avenue, the neighborhood's commercial center, and on Overbrook Road. 2500 North Avenue is a gable-roofed, two-story, brick duplex with a two-story pedimented porch centered on the street façade. 814 Overbrook Road is a three-story brick apartment house built in 1920s. Near the commercial intersection with Chamberlayne Avenue, the nine-bay building makes a transition between the lower scale residential neighborhood and the businesses on Chamberlayne. The prominent central bay accents the pedimented ground floor entry and terminates in a ramped parapet. Windows are also articulated: with a plaster surround at the second floor and with a key-stoned arch at the third floor. Identical one-bay porches are centered on the 4-bay blocks flanking the entrance. The porches are enhanced with full modillioned entablatures at three levels. Tuscan columns support the upper porches, while brick piers with Tuscan capitals enclose the first-floor porches.

One of the two churches in Battery Court, Mount Hermon Baptist Church at 2814 Moss Side Avenue, was built in the Colonial Revival style as the Battery Park Christian Church. A weatherboarded temple-form frame building, it has the residential scale and character of its neighbors. The pedimented gable end is echoed in the simplified pediment of the one-bay central porch. Fluted Roman Doric columns support the porch roof. This church property marks the northern limit of Battery Park.

Bungalow/Craftsman (1910s-1920s)

Bungalow style houses rivaled the Colonial Revival style for popularity in the Battery Court Historic District. Most of these builder-designed American Foursquare houses were surfaced with stucco or gunnite, but there are notable examples in brick. These Bungalow style houses frequently have hipped roofs and raised one-story, front porches with prominent piers. The rafters are often exposed within deep eaves, and the roof is sometimes further accentuated with a centered dormer. As is typical throughout the district, groups of very similar houses incorporate subtle differentiation in the shaping of dormers and in the details of porch piers and balustrades.

2721 Montrose Avenue represents the classic small-scale bungalow. One-story, brick and symmetrical, the four-bay dwelling has deep overhangs on scrolled outriggers. The single-bay center porch repeats the house's pyramidal roof. Triple Tuscan colonettes on brick piers mark the corners of the porch. 607 Edgehill Road presents similar massing, materials, and details.

2909 Montrose Avenue is another Bungalow style house with a gunnite surface. One story tall and three bays wide with a low-pitch gable roof, it has a wide, centered, gable dormer with a tripartite window. Matching chimneys penetrate the prominent roof overhang. A one-story three-bay porch runs the length of the facade. Four, massive, gunnite-covered columns on brick piers carry the porch's segmental arches.

An older example from the 1910s, 108 W. Lancaster is a one-and-a-half story, gable-roofed house with two splayed gable-end dormers. The street facade is asymmetrically divided between a three-bay porch and a tripartite window bay. The porch piers and the front foundation wall are faced in broken ceramic tile. Tapering box columns hold up the deep-eaved roof.

Commercial Style (1920s-1930s)

Battery Court's small commercial district meets the neighboring Barton Heights and Brookland Park Historic Districts along North Avenue between Norwood Avenue and Graham Road. The one-story storefronts at 2416 and 2418-2420 North Avenue date from the 1930s and both have recessed entrances between large shop window openings. They are constructed of brick laid in stretcher bond, with simple panels expressed in brick at the parapeted roofline. On either side are the more typical two-story mixed-use brick buildings of earlier decades. The lower floors housed businesses, while apartments filled the upper floors.

Classical Revival (1940s)

Overbrook Presbyterian Church (now All Souls Presbyterian) at 19 Overbrook Road is the sole example of the Classical Revival style in the Battery Court Historic District. The brick sanctuary features a Doric portico in antis flanked by bays that form truncated corner towers. The walls terminate in parapets. The principal floor, above a raised basement, is reached by a broad flight of concrete steps framed by brick plinths. Windows in the tower bays are pedimented and rest on consoles. The Doric columns and pilaster capitals are stone, as are the sills and copings. Cast-iron light standards terminate the stair sequence at grade. A pair of double-leaf, entry doors with transoms and paired windows above fill the sides of the recessed portico. At center is mural of the Christ.

Prairie School (1920s)

2814 Dupont Circle (George Bernier House) is a fine example of the Prairie School. Two stories, with multiple green-tiled roofs and deep overhangs, the orange-colored brick dwelling is asymmetrically balanced. Banded casement windows in the one-story hip-roofed solarium assert the horizontal, as does the projecting water table and the broad eaves. An open brick arch frames the recessed entry. Nearby 2816 Dupont Circle, is executed in the same materials but with Colonial Revival details.

Spanish Mission (1920s)

Exemplifying other revival styles popular with the new century's builders, 2604 Hawthorne Avenue was built in an Italian Renaissance style with elements of Spanish Mission style. The two-story frame dwelling rendered in stucco, the house features a central hipped roof mass balanced by one-story wings on either side. The front porch is arched with a recessed entry. The enclosed solarium is also arcaded. Rafter ends project from either wing, mimicking Spanish Mission construction techniques. A molded stringcourse separates the centered four windows at the ground floor and the two sets of paired windows at the second floor.

Tudor Revival (1920s)

It's likely that Richmond architect Bascom J. Rowlett⁴ designed his own Tudor Revival style house at 2800 Dupont Circle in the 1920s. A two-story frame structure rendered in stucco, its complex roofs are covered in slates. The picturesque composition of the façade includes an interior chimney and a single-bay porch with fanciful turned colonettes, which swirl to onion shapes at the tops. The windows are casements. A garage at the rear of the property was designed in the same style and materials.

2506 Hawthorne Avenue is a two-story, gable-roofed house finished in stucco with brick accents. The entrance is expressed as a one-story brick projection. The gable end is half-timbered. Balancing the left side is a (now-enclosed) one-bay porch framed by a segmental arch. French doors on the ground floor and two windows above flank a central interior chimney, built in brick.

813 Edge Hill Road is a two-story building with a brick-faced first floor and a stuccoed second floor. A projecting one-story gable end announces its asymmetrical entry. The façade's half-timbered gable end projects from the mass of the house. A cast stone key and quoins distinguish the arched front entry. Tripartite windows light both floors. The ground floor windows are shifted off-center in order to accommodate the entry.

Battery Court (127-5897)
Richmond, VA

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Battery Court Historic District exhibits the growing sophistication of Richmond, Virginia's developers in an intact neighborhood whose significance spans from 1909-1949. As the most recent (1909) of Northside's streetcar subdivisions, this development benefited from its owners' experience in 1890s ventures like Brookland Park and Chestnut Hill. The proximity of nearby Ginter Park's more spacious layout and the influence of the City Beautiful movement prompted Battery Court's owners to set aside a swath of green as a public amenity. Battery Park crosses the historic district from northwest to southeast and is the neighborhood's defining feature. Streets deform with the change in topography as they meet Battery Park. Both lots and houses take on the more generous proportions of Ginter Park at the north end of the historic district. Highland Park Realty Corporation lured tradesmen and white-collar families to new, speculatively built houses in this picturesque neighborhood with the promise of new schools and public transportation into the city.

The Battery Court Historic District meets National Register Criterion A as one of several North Richmond streetcar suburbs. Battery Court meets National Register Criterion C because of its stock of exemplary middle-class housing dating from the first half of the twentieth century.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Battery Court Historic District is comprised of three, adjacent, residential developments: Battery Court (including Battery Court Addition), Parkland, and Roland Park. The neighborhood and the historic district are named for a Civil War era structure in Richmond's outer defense perimeter, Confederate Battery No. 8, which was located at the site of the Albert V. Norrell Elementary School Annex on Wickham Avenue. The battery overlooked the streambed of Griffin's Branch, which ran alongside the old North Richmond Road (now Hawthorne Avenue). As development of the town Barton Heights expanded north and west from its original grid, the Highland Park Realty Corporation¹ proposed a new suburb in 1909. The developers promised a parklike setting along the streambed, which proved so appealing that by 1913 tracts between Brookland Park Boulevard on the north, Wickham Avenue on the south and Chamberlayne Avenue on the west were laid out. At the center of the attractive suburb was Battery Park, which followed Griffin's Branch north past the old fortifications to finger into five tree-lined avenues. Today Hawthorne Avenue still retains the flavor of the development: a generous median divides the street before it continues across Brookland Park Boulevard out of the district to Pollard Park and Ginter Park Terrace.

Early in the development of neighboring Barton Heights, the land that became Battery Park remained agricultural. As Barton Heights expanded, so did the school-age population and in 1905 T. Ashby Wickham² sold a lot on Wickham Avenue between Miller and Greenwood to Henrico County's Brookland District School Board. In January 1907 an impressive Barton Heights High School building was dedicated at this northwestern limit of the town. The dedication included addresses by well-known newspaper publisher and Northside landowner John Stewart Bryan and Governor A. J. Montague,³ indicating the popularity of Northside's first suburb. Less than twenty years after speculator James H. Barton broke ground in the Barton Heights; his 1889 dream of a flourishing North Richmond community became reality.⁴

James H. Barton's sometime competitors and partners in the Highland Park Company had created Chestnut Hill, a parallel development just east of Barton Heights, accessed by the Fifth Street Viaduct.⁵ In general the Highland Park Company had better local connections than Barton. Officers included N. W. Bowe, the husband of one of Fendall Griffin's heirs. Griffin (1795-1872) was a delegate from Henrico County to the legislature, and owned much of the land along Griffin's Branch.⁶

Within two years of the high school's opening, the Highland Park Realty Corporation,⁷ successor to the Northside Land Company and the Highland Park Company, began advertising the park-like setting along the eastern side of Griffin's Branch as the Battery Court development. Two years later, in 1911, the Battery Court Addition opened to buyers along the west side of Griffin's Branch offered by the same corporation. Located between Wickham Avenue on the south and Edgehill Road on the north, the Addition expanded development west to Chamberlayne Avenue.⁸

The development of Ginter Park, the suburb north of Brookland Park Boulevard, paralleled the efforts of Barton and his colleagues in the Northside Land Company.⁹ But in contrast to the speculative nature of the latter's efforts, multi-millionaire tobacco manufacturer and philanthropist Lewis Ginter consciously sought to create a garden suburb. Since 1889, Ginter's suburb had attracted a more socially and economically established clientele. Ginter himself lived at Westbrook, an estate that lay north of the development. Housing in Ginter Park was not primarily speculative and the lot sizes were generous, with 100-foot frontages. In 1895 the Presbyterian Union Theological Seminary began building on Ginter Park's premier site on Brook Road, opposite Joseph Bryan's Laburnum. In 1890 Ginter was in contact with Frederick Law Olmstead concerning landscaping Sherwood Park, another Northside property west of Brook Road, along Brookland Park Boulevard.¹⁰

It is in this context that the Highland Park Realty Corporation established Battery Court in 1909. The first parcels developed were immediately northwest of Barton Heights, west of North Avenue between Graham Road and Norwood Avenue, and stopping at the verge of Griffin's Branch with the Terrace, a street that followed the contours of the old fortifications and faced Battery Park. This property belonged to Mrs. Fannie Graham, whose name would be perpetuated in Graham Road. Within two years (1911) more Graham land to the west across the park was opened up from Wickham Street to Edgehill Road in the north and bounded by Chamberlayne Avenue on the west.¹¹ Lot widths in this area were 50 feet in contrast to 35 feet in the original offerings across the park to the east.

Not to be outdone, the Barton Heights Realty and Improvement Company (James H. Barton's successors) opened up the Parkland subdivision in 1910. South of the Brookland Park Boulevard these properties were adjacent to Brookland Park, the 1890 development of Barton and Joseph M. Fourqurean at the intersection of North Avenue and Brookland Park Boulevard (then called simply the Boulevard). In 1890 this land had been Lot no. 2 in the subdivision of the lands of Edward Griffin's property¹² and was assigned to George N. Griffin. An access road across two other Lots was cut from the North Road westward: the genesis of today's Essex Street.¹³ The lot sizes in Parkland were 50-feet wide and fronted two streets, Melrose and Edgewood.

Roland Park (1913) was developed by the Highland Park Realty Company, and bounded by Brookland Park Boulevard on the north, the Chamberlayne Avenue properties of the Lewis Ginter Land & Improvement Company (Chamberlayne Place) on the west,¹⁴ and the Parkland development on the east. This property was the last of the lands owned by Emma L. Bowe, widow of N. W. Bowe and heiress to Fendall Griffin's property.¹⁵ Roland Park lay immediately to the south of Ginter Park's Hawthorne and Noble Avenues. As a result of the Roland Park development, those roads were extended, accomplishing a visual connection between Battery Park and Pollard Park, across Brookland Park Boulevard. Again the lots were 50-feet wide.

The public lands of Battery Park (11.8 acres) were deeded to the city in 1922 at a cost of $17,500. In 1928 Griffin's Branch was filled in, and over the next decade the playgrounds and other amenities were completely rebuilt with help from Works Progress Administration (WPA) funding. In 1942 the Battery Park Community House was dedicated. This charming park structure was faced with discarded cobble stones.¹⁸

There are two churches located in Battery Park. The 1920s Overbrook Presbyterian (now All Souls) stands at 19 Overbrook Road at the southeastern corner of Miller Avenue. The home-like Battery Park Christian Church (now Mount Hermon Baptist Church) at 2814 Moss Side Avenue was built by 1932 at the northern edge of the park. A suburban Henrico congregation retains the Overbrook name at its church on Dumbarton Road, and Battery Park Christian has moved to a more substantial sanctuary at Bellevue Avenue and Brook Road in Ginter Park. The historic church buildings continue to serve active congregations.

The residents of the neighborhood enjoyed proximity to prestigious Ginter Park, but socially they were solidly middle class. In the 1920s Bascom J. Rowlet, an architect lived at 2800 Dupont Circle. C. C. Davis, an architect with Imperial Tobacco, lived at 2812. George Bernier, superintendent with the Home Brewing Company was at 2814. Barney Briel, the grocer from North Avenue, whose family had lived in North Richmond since the mid-nineteenth century, owned 2810 Dupont Circle. On Hawthorne, Meverell B. Van Doren, a contractor, lived at 2911 for three decades. T. J. Cromar, a stone setter, was living in the unique stone-faced 2809 Montrose in the 1920s. The handsome façade of this house was probably an example of the original owner's handiwork.

northside of Wickham Street; then proceeding east along the north side of Wickham road to a point of intersection with the west side of Miller Avenue; then proceeding north along the western edge of Miller Avenue to a point of intersection with a line extended across Miller Avenue from the northside of the alley between west Graham Road and Wickham Street; then proceeding east along said line, following the north side of the alley and crossing Rose Avenue to a point of intersection with the east side of Rose Avenue; then proceeding south along the east side of Rose Avenue to a point of intersection with the property line separating parcel N000-0488-010 from parcels N000-0488-001 and 002; then proceeding east to a point of intersection with the western edge of parcel N000-0488-004; then proceeding south along the west side of said parcel to a point of intersection with the property line separating parcel N000-0488-004 from N000-0488-005; then proceeding east along said property line to a point of intersection with the west side of North Avenue; then proceeding north along the west side of North Avenue, crossing West Graham Road, Overbrook Road, and West Lancaster Road to a point of intersection with the south side of West Norwood Avenue; then proceeding west along the south side of Norwood Avenue crossing Miller Avenue and Fendall Avenue to a point of intersection with the west side of Griffin Avenue; then proceeding north along the west side of Griffin Avenue, crossing Hooper and Essex streets to a point of intersection with the south side of Brookland Park Boulevard, and thus back to the point of beginning.

Verbal Boundary Justification

The boundaries for the proposed Battery Court Historic District are based on a 1911 plat for Battery Court (1909), Battery Court Addition (1911), Parkland (1910) and Roland Park (1913). These developments were combined in a single historic district because of their proximity to Battery Park and their dates of subdivision. Noncontributing properties at the edges of these subdivisions were excluded from the historic district boundaries.
